Chaste in Borneo

Over the course of Alastair Galpin's ten-year world record-breaking career, the planet has been informed of some crazy antics. He's now on the brink of reaching his 100th world record. This time though, has he gone too far?

Not afraid of enduring some pain and discomfort in the desire to achieve world record success, Al has been known to take part in stunts such as rotating toothpicks in his mouth, shaking hands for 33 hours and wearing the unusual. It's all at WorldRecordChase.com.

Well, this time, Al intends to go one step further - he's deliberately about to chastise himself and then circumnavigate the tropical island of Borneo - in the humid wet season. November 22 has been ear-marked as the day he sets off. Here's further info...

Seeking an idea that would overshoot media's expectations from this wild individual, Al spent days pondering new world record ideas. Finally, he believed he'd chanced upon the brightest idea he'd had all year. If he could lock his sacred male apparatus away, and if the key was withheld from use until he reached his goal destination, he'd face both a physical and mental challenge by hitchhiking while chaste. His mind was made up; he'd pursue the title, "Furthest surface journey in a male chastity device". Al was drawn to the thought of circling Borneo, in the heavy rains, by himself, showing extreme self-control, and being up to tackle the challenge using printed sheets of translated info to get him between pre-mapped waypoints. This really excited the man.

Having never worn a male chastity device, and indeed never having seen one, Al committed to a sponsor: CB-X Male Chastity in Las Vegas. It was then game on, and planning intensified. Al arranged accommodation right across the island, secured ferry bookings and has his passport at hand. He'll need this document because the north of Borneo comprises Malaysia and Brunei, both of which he intends to waddle across in self-inflicted pain too.

Al's route will take him from the tourist hub of Bali, across the Java Sea to the southern Bornean city of Banjarmasin. From there he's due to head west, then north into Malaysia, north-east into Brunei and then south again down the east coast of Borneo. In the far south-east of the island, he'll hop onto another ferry across to South Sulawesi. Here, the opportunity to regain his sexual freedom will be awaiting him. That's if he can survive this long without surrendering to the expected discomfort of the chastity device - and having an engineering workshop staff member grind it off his nether regions in disbelief.

In Al's own words, "I'm pretty tenacious when it comes to the world record attempts I make. There'd have to be a real emergency for me to voluntarily end this journey early. That would not be showing the true spirit of world record breaking, would it?"

Stories abound of chastity devices having caused issues for men, although Al trusts the testimonies of the many men who have joyous recollections of wearing theirs. That's the kind of pleasure Al's seeking too – besides the world record title, of course.

So, Kalimantan, as the island is known in Indonesia, is about to receive a rather odd-minded visitor. Who knows how this is all going to turn out, both for Al and for his sacred male apparatus. All he's sure of to date is that this journey's set to be his fastest hitchhiking one yet. Perhaps, when all's considered, could this event give new meaning to the term, "the wild man of Borneo"?
